Here are the scoring parameters for the self-assessment: ± 1.5 for full 20 points and ± 2.5 for 10 points. They may be different in your class.

Click here to see your calibration results (if you did a recalibration, only the 2nd one is shown). It will look like this. Anything that is underlined is clickable. So, you can revisit the calibration paragraphs, see your answers and the author's answers and click on why the authors made their decisions. Near the top you see "65% Style" and "65% Content" - meaning you must get at least 65% of the style and content questions correct to master the calibration. "Max.Dev. = 2.5" means your rating of the paragraph must be within ± 2.5 of the rating given the paragraph by the assignment's author. To master the calibration, you must pass all 3 parts of it. For more details, see page 1 under Part 2.

The small arrow means you are looking at the "Results" page.

This weight factor depends on how well the reviewer did on the calibrations. A person who did terribly on the calibrations has a low weight applied to her/his ratings and will not affect the text rating.

If any scores appear in red at the bottom after a week or so, then your instructor or some other qualified person has looked at an essay (either yours or your peers) and reassessed it. This may or may not change your final score. If you have any questions, or want your scores reassessed, contact your instructor.

In this case, if the Self-Assessment Deviation is 1.5 or less, you get 20 pts, if 2.5 or less, you get 10 pts, if greater than 2.5, 0 pts.

Your paragraph's score is 2x the rating given it by your peers.
